"A terrific success," was the label tagged to the recent visit of the Red Cross Bloodmobile to Torrance by Mrs. Clifford Easley, blood recruitment chairman.

"We processed 253 donors from which the Blood Bank gained 230 pints of blood," said Mrs. Easley.

Commenting on the Bloodmobile's visit to the Civic Auditorium last Friday afternoon, Mrs. Easley said:

"Being the first Blood Bank visit in a good number of years, a number of details were noted that will make the handling of the next visit of the Bloodmobile a great deal more efficient."

She said that the unit is planning a return visit to the city some time in March or April. Planned also are visits of the Red Cross unit at outlying districts such as Seaside Ranchos and the Hollywood Riviera area. Also planned are visits of the unit at local plants were 30 to 60 donors could be processed. This would take some of the load off the unit during its spring visit, she stated.

It Takes a Good Job to Hold a Good Man 10 Years

... And It Takes Good Men to Build Good Airplanes

Among the people you work with, how many have been on the job 10 years? Not many, probably, and you'd expect even more change in a business as young as aviation. Yet nearly 1 out of 10 at North American has worked here 10 years or more and 35% of these are now in supervisory positions. It's no accident that North American has this strong backbone of skilled veteran craftsmen today when planes are so urgently needed for your security in the skies. It's the result of company policy to make jobs at North American careers. In the manufacturing division, for instance, every single supervisory job—from vice-president-in-charge to assistant foreman—has been filled by promotion within North American. As a matter of fact, 98% of all supervisory jobs here are held by men who worked their way up. It's evidence that a man can stick with North American and get ahead. That's the way North American wants it, for it takes good men to build good airplanes. And making jobs attractive enough to hold such men is another way North American helps make the nation secure in the skies.

Of course, North American tries to help him keep safe and well. There's a medical staff to look after his physical well-being and see that he's assigned a job he's able to handle. That's one reason why North American's accident rate is 50% below the industry average.

After he gets through work there's a 15-acre recreation field for him and his family to play on. He can indulge in 14 different sports. And there are clubs and groups of fellow employees with whom he can pursue his favorite hobbies.

Yes, a lot of thought and effort have gone into making North American a good place to work because we want to attract good men. North American knows, the better the workmen, the better the planes they produce for your security in the skies.

What Makes a Good Job Good?

Any man worth his salt wants to get ahead. You've read at left how North American gives him that chance, but there are other reasons why Mr. Average North American has an above-average kind of job. Let's look at some of them:

First, he brings home good wages, because North American believes a good man deserves good pay. His paycheck is adjusted to the cost of living, and it's bolstered by an automatic raise every 16 weeks until he's at the top of his classification. He gets a two weeks vacation with pay every year, and another week's pay for sick leave. He's protected by life and accident insurance that also pays surgical and hospital costs for both himself and his family.

Since North American encourages him to get ahead, he's interested in his work and probably spends some of his spare time thinking up better ways to do things. As a result, he'll be one of the 11,000 who have split up more than a quarter of a million dollars North American has paid out for employee suggestions. If a little more education will speed up his advancement, and he wants it, North American will gladly pay up to two-thirds of his tuition.

Of course, North American tries to help him keep safe and well. There's a medical staff to look after his physical well-being and see that he's assigned a job he's able to handle. That's one reason why North American's accident rate is 50% below the industry average.
